FOOD CUPBOARDS

An emergency food cupboard, also known as a food center or food pantry, is a place where a person in a food emergency can go for immediate help. These centers are designed to provide an individual or family with a food package prepared to last 3-4 days. Even if days and hours are listed, it is always important to phone a food cupboard prior going to a food cupboard, to check their eligibility requirements, food availability, and days/hours of operation.

The amount and type of food varies from center to center but is usually canned goods and dry staples. Since the cupboards depend on voluntary donations of food, the food given out might be a well-planned nutritious package or it could be nothing more than cereal and a few canned goods. Generally, the norm falls between the two. The majority of food cupboards require some evidence of need such as a phone call or letter of referral from a recognized social service agency. All food cupboards will serve persons regardless of race or religion, but some restrict their service to persons living within a specific geographic area.
